When you hand a young child a pitcher full of water, adults usually reach out first, afraid it will spill. But if you prepare a small pitcher and cup that fit the child's hands and wait, the child may spill a few times but eventually learns how to pour water on their own. The child learns more when the person teaching takes a step back. The educational approach that helps children learn by choosing and trying things for themselves in this way is "Montessori education." Simply put, Montessori education means "an educational method that sees children as beings born with the drive to learn and he
