Picture a student who moves to a new country every few years with parents who work as diplomats or at international organizations. Because every country has different textbooks and exams, it is hard to get proper credit for your grades when applying to university, no matter where you finish high school. It is as if you had to restart your studies every time you move. Born out of this very problem, the 'International Baccalaureate' created a single curriculum and exam that are accepted by universities anywhere in the world. Put simply, the International Baccalaureate means 'the international cu
