

Knowledge Hidden Outside Formal Publishing: Grey Literature

Article URL

<https://www.gklibrarykor.com/en/article/9788/>

PDF layout preview - excerpt only

When writing a paper or preparing an assignment, we usually start with journals and books. Yet there is an enormous number of documents that rarely show up in bookstores or journal indexes, such as research reports from government ministries, technical documents released by companies, graduate theses, and materials presented at academic conferences. The name that groups all of these materials together is “grey literature.” Simply put, grey literature refers to materials produced and released directly by institutions such as governments, universities, companies, and civic organizations, without