

Handing Over Logistics Entirely: Third-Party Logistics

Article URL

<https://www.gklibrarykor.com/en/article/9809/>

PDF layout preview - excerpt only

The owner who has just opened an online shop soon finds the living room filling up with boxes. As orders grow, the whole day disappears into packing, attaching shipping labels, and calling couriers. At this point, many companies choose to hand everything from storage to shipping over to a specialist company. This is 'third-party logistics.' Simply put, third-party logistics means 'entrusting part or all of a company's logistics work, over the long term, to an outside logistics specialist with which it has no special relationship.' It is commonly called 3PL after its English abbreviation, and t